UFC 317 features a key women's flyweight showdown as seasoned contender Viviane Araujo takes on rising star Tracy Cortez in a fight that could have major implications for the top 10 rankings. With both women eyeing a potential title run, this bout offers a compelling blend of athleticism, technical skill, and high stakes. Expect a strategic battle between a proven veteran and an unbeaten rising force.

Viviane Araujo (12-5) enters the bout with experience and a strong resume in the flyweight division. The Brazilian striker is known for her crisp boxing, strong takedown defense, and explosive movement. Araujo has fought some of the best at 125 pounds, including former champion Alexa Grasso and top contender Katlyn Chookagian. While she's had ups and downs, her ability to go the distance and threaten both on the feet and the mat makes her a dangerous opponent for anyone in the top 10.

Tracy Cortez (11-1) remains undefeated in the UFC and is quickly becoming one of the division's most promising talents. Representing Fight Ready MMA, Cortez has steadily improved with every outing, showcasing solid wrestling, great control on the ground, and intelligent striking. With wins over the likes of Melissa Gatto and Justine Kish, she's proven she can handle tough competition. Against a seasoned striker like Araujo, Cortez will look to rely on her grappling and pace to control the fight.

The matchup is a classic striker vs grappler contest. Araujo will aim to keep the fight standing and use her powerful hands to keep Cortez at bay. On the other hand, Cortez's path to victory likely involves closing the distance, initiating clinch exchanges, and securing takedowns to dominate with top control. The winner will likely move one step closer to a title eliminator in a division that is evolving rapidly.

With Araujo looking to rebound into contender status and Cortez hoping to extend her unbeaten UFC streak, this fight is a must-watch for fans of high-level women's MMA.
